

Re: April Fool's Day Apology

Dear Valued Staff,

As the practice owner, and your employer, it is never my intention to cause you any undue stress. I would like to issue this apology for the events of April 1, 2017, and give you some updates.

Most importantly: Barbra is expected to fully recover. I spoke with her doctor this morning. It wasn't a stroke. Relatedly, I've recaptured the tarantula, and as a precaution, thrown away the plastic Halloween spiders. This year we'll just do paper cutouts of ghosts, witches, etc. I had no idea she had a phobia.

There isn't any speech recognition software in the "updated" practice management system. At this point I am not sure if you still think there is or if you're just still mad at me. I hear a lot of yelling.

Replacing all the coffee in the breakroom with decaf from March 27–31, and then dumping "turbo blend" in on April 1 was ill-conceived. I learned a lot. But if we can somehow balance how fast hygiene was that day and mitigate the trembling hands, we could probably improve production. Additionally, I apologize for replacing the diet pop with club soda and soy sauce.

Turns out the fake child support summons I gave the new associate is the reason he decided to leave. We wish him the best of luck in his new practice. Please stop asking me if he's hiring.

I have pulled down the Craigslist ad listing the office number as the hotline for the "Chewbacca Roar Contest." We should stop getting calls soon. Just hold the phone away from your ear when you answer until at least midweek.

Lastly, in no specific order and without going into details, I apologize for:

- lubricating the toilet seats.
- the stray cat I put in Robert's car. (She didn't look pregnant when I tossed her in there.)
- the incident with the banana.
- locking the TVs to Telemundo.

Again, I'm very sorry. Please accept this Starbucks gift card. This time there's actually money on it.

Respectfully,
Dr. Smith
